Strange weather in Wongarron

Lee Burns

Yesterday around noon the locals of the small western town on Wongarron were surprised when storm clouds overhead released a shower of frogs instead of water!

The unlucky amphibians tumbled down on the township for about five minutes.

Local businesswoman, June Marin, was outside her shop when the deluge started.

‘It was totally unexpected! I’ve never seen anything like it. We thought we’d get just a drop or two of rain, but this? It’s bizarre!’ she said.

Most of the frogs appeared unharmed by their ordeal and hopped away into the local park.

‘They have taken up residence in the duck pond,’ said council gardener, Doug Pitt, ‘so they’ll be safe enough there.’

Scientists say that occurrences like this are rare but have happened before.
